A bird call specifically designed for hunting corvids

The Helen Baud Crow Call 93 was designed to reproduce the characteristic calls of the crow . Its realistic sound helps attract the attention of birds and optimize calling strategies during population control operations or specialized corvid hunts.

A simple and effective design

Thanks to its proven design, this call allows for natural vocalizations with quick and easy handling. Its intuitive operation makes it easy to reproduce believable calls, even for users new to corvid calls.

Boxwood in the service of sound realism

The boxwood mouthpiece contributes to the call's acoustic quality. This dense wood is traditionally used in call making for its ability to produce precise and natural sounds. Combined with a robust PVC body, it guarantees an excellent balance between performance and durability.

Compact and always available

At only 11.2 cm long and weighing 35 grams, this game call easily fits in a jacket pocket or hunting vest. Its compact size means it's readily available when conditions are right for its use.

A popular accessory for controlling corvid populations.

Crows are particularly vigilant and sensitive to sound. A realistic crow call is therefore a valuable asset for attracting their attention and enhancing the effectiveness of observation or hunting methods. The Model 93 follows this principle with a design conceived for field use.
