Falling Block mechanism: simplicity and precision

The falling block action is renowned for its robustness and inherent accuracy. Single-shot feeding promotes controlled shooting and total concentration on each shot. This type of action appeals to enthusiasts of traditional shooting disciplines and the sport of clay target shooting.

Canon 24" in .22 WMR

The 24-inch (610 mm) barrel allows the .22 WMR to fully exploit its potential. The 1:16 twist rate ensures effective bullet stabilization, promoting consistent groupings at medium range. In practice, the barrel length also contributes to excellent stability.

Adjustable diopter sight

The presence of a tang-mounted diopter sight , adjustable for elevation and windage, provides a real advantage for precision shooting. Combined with a dovetail front sight adjustable for windage, it allows for fine adjustments depending on the distance and shooting conditions.

Traditional finish and oiled walnut

The Color Case finish on the receiver offers an authentic aesthetic, contrasting with the blued barrel. The hand-oiled walnut stock and forend provide a natural and comfortable grip. This is a firearm that appeals as much for its looks as for its mechanics.

FAQ

To which category does this rifle belong?

In .22 WMR caliber with single-shot manual repeating, this rifle is classified in category C. Its acquisition requires a declaration and the presentation of a valid ownership permit in accordance with French regulations.

What is the advantage of a single-shot system?

The single-shot design promotes concentration and precision, as each shot is manually loaded. This makes it a platform particularly suited to stationary shooting and technical training.

Is the diopter adjustable?

Yes, the tang-mounted diopter is adjustable in elevation and windage, allowing precise adjustment of the point of impact according to the shooting distance.
