The authentic character of solid oak

Solid oak is particularly prized for its warm appearance, robustness, and the natural beauty of its grain. Each piece has its own unique nuances and characteristics, which contribute to the charm of real wood.

The varnished finish highlights the natural grain of the oak while protecting its surface from everyday dirt. It also makes dusting easier and helps preserve its appearance over time.

A traditional shape with meticulous finishing touches

The outline of the shield is highlighted by a decorative molding that harmoniously follows its curves. This profiling work adds depth and creates an elegant transition between the central surface and the edges of the support.

Its classic shape with a downward point is in keeping with the tradition of hunting trophy plaques . It allows for a balanced presentation, whether for a single trophy or for a collection of kills displayed on a wall.

The back of the badge is equipped with a metal hanging system for wall mounting. The trophy can be attached to the front using a device adapted to its configuration.

In a hunting lodge, a trophy room or a traditional interior, this wall-mounted deer trophy display blends naturally into a decor that celebrates wood and hunting memorabilia.

FAQ

How to attach a deer slaughter to a wooden shield?

The skull is usually secured using screws or a mounting system adapted to the skull's preparation. The trophy must be properly centered on the shield to ensure a balanced presentation. The mounting device should be chosen according to the trophy's weight and shape.

What is the difference between a shield made of solid oak and a shield made of veneered wood?

A solid oak escutcheon is made of real wood throughout its entire thickness, while a veneered model has a thin layer of decorative wood applied to another material. Solid oak displays a natural grain that extends into the wood and allows for certain restoration or sanding operations if necessary.

How to choose the size of a badge for a deer trophy?

The choice depends primarily on the skull's dimensions, the width of the antlers, and the desired mounting style. For a harmonious presentation, the escutcheon must offer sufficient surface area to accommodate the bony portion of the trophy without excessively obscuring its decorative contours. A 450 x 320 mm model is suitable for various deer mounts, provided their dimensions are verified.
