A faithful reproduction of the 1862 model

Inspired by Richmond rifles produced during the American Civil War, this version respects the original lines: external percussion lock, understated metal fittings, and a straight walnut stock. The overall effect is one of immediate authenticity, whether displayed in a showcase or at the shooting range.

.58 caliber percussion operation

Chambered in .58 , this rifle uses black powder and is percussion-ignited. It is muzzle-loaded, following the traditional method. This specific technique is an integral part of the experience of shooting historical firearms.

Canon 25'' and traditional precision

The 25" (635 mm) barrel offers good stability and comfortable aiming. The adjustable rear sight allows for adapting the shot to the distance. When used within a suitable and regulated framework, it allows for black powder shooting in accordance with the established disciplines.

Wood and White finish

The hand-oiled walnut stock adds warmth and authenticity. The white finish (polished white steel) highlights the mechanical lines and underscores the historical character of the weapon. Every detail contributes to the overall aesthetic.
